

The Scene: Taking the lead

Miller Heads Student Group At Seminary

This September, Jason Miller, son of Gary and Bobbie Miller, will become president of the Rabbinical School Student Organization (RSSO) at the Jewish Theological Seminary of America. The RSSO represents the 130 rabbinical students at New York-based JTS.

In addition, he will be student liaison to the lay board of overseers. Two Detroiters, Paul Magy and Marjorie Saulson, are active board participants. The RSSO also runs a placement service for rabbinical students, matching students with rabbinic positions in the community.

Three other Detroiters — Samatha Rollinger, Josh Wohl and Jeremy Yoskowitz — are enrolled at JTS's Rabbinical School.

Miller will be ordained in May 2004 and is interested in becoming a congregational rabbi.

The Hillel Day School of Metropolitan Detroit and Michigan State University graduate is a member of Adat Shalom Synagogue in Farmington Hills. Miller is serving as rabbinic intern at Congregation Agudath Israel in New Jersey. He also travels monthly to Leesburg, Va., to serve as spiritual leader of the Loudoun Jewish Congregation.

Jason Miller

The Scene

Miller Heads Student Group At Seminary

This September, Jason Miller, son of Gary and Bobbie Miller, will become president of the Rabbinical School Student Organization (RSSO) at the Jewish Theological Seminary of America. The RSSO represents the 130 rabbinical students at New York-based JTS.

In addition, he will be student liaison to the lay board of overseers. Two Detroiters, Paul Magy and Marjorie Saulson, are active board participants. The RSSO also runs a placement service for rabbinical students, matching students with rabbinic positions in the community.

Three other Detroiters — Samatha Rollinger, Josh Wohl and Jeremy Yoskowitz — are enrolled at JTS's Rabbinical School.

Miller will be ordained in May 2004 and is interested in becoming a congregational rabbi.

The Hillel Day School of Metropolitan Detroit and Michigan State University graduate is a member of Adat Shalom Synagogue in Farmington Hills. Miller is serving as rabbinic intern at Congregation Agudath Israel in New Jersey. He also travels monthly to Leesburg, Va., to serve as spiritual leader of the Loudoun Jewish Congregation.

Jason Miller